

A Surprise Visit

Chapter 1 by Katelyn

When I was young I was obsessed with the idea of time. I would write out lists about where I wanted to go if I could time travel. Everything from the Egyptians to a pirate ship ended up on that list. I knew that if the future me would ever get a chance to time travel they would and so I made myself some promises.

My first promise would be that before I began my adventures my first stop would be to visit a past me. I started by picking dates that future me would arrive at, but each time the date passed and my disappointment grew I decided to stop that tradition.

The second promise I made to myself was a password future me would use to communicate with past me. I thought long and hard about this knowing the password had to be memorable and unique, as a child this was a very difficult decision. In the end I picked the phrase "The Two Doctors are Calling", based on two time travelling characters my dad had introduced me to. If I ever saw this phrase I would know it was coming from me.

Lastly, I promised that I would take past me into the future and into the past. The decision where exactly would be left up to past me.

Years past and I grew from a curious child into an adult. While I was still interested in the idea of time travel I had forgotten my three promises. That was until I got a text reading "The Two Doctors are Calling".

Chapter 2 by Spookums

It had to be a prank. It just had to be.

No one else knew about my past obsession though. If I had told anyone, they would have laughed. I would have been the weird kid at school.

"Who is this?" I texted back cautiously. I didn't want to give this joker more of an opportunity to mess with me, but I couldn't just ignore it.

After ten long minutes had passed, my phone buzzed.

"We need to meet. Come to the park."

It was almost 1am according to the digital display of my alarm clock. Its red, glaring numbers seemed to judge me for even considering leaving the house this late on a work night.

I texted the unknown number a few more times but whoever it was didn't reply again. This was definitely a wind up.

Definitely.

No doubt about it.

But maybe...

Before I knew it, I had grabbed my phone and a jacket and headed out the front door.

Chapter 3 by Mason Lee

"I am dreaming. I am in a deep sleep and you two are not real and when I wake up everything will be fine," I told myself.

I hoped.

I wished.

And yet, part of me wanted it so, so badly to be real.

There they were, the two men, the older Second Doctor with his clean cut grey hair and black dress coat with his blue spotted bow tie and the Sixth Doctor with his curly brown hair and colorful clothes, each with a sonic screwdriver and the little blue box, the TARDIS, the time travel machine.

"Hello, Katelyn," they both said in unison.

I fainted.

Chapter 5 by OnaS25

I finally could prove that I wasn't insane. I haven't lost my marbles. All this time waiting for this day, to see the time machine. They ushered me in as fast as they could. sitting down in their pilot like chairs. "Sit and strap in!" They also said in unison. I got used to it by now, the twin thing. The randomly started talking gibberish and pressing these bright, neon buttons. I think there was about 200 of them. "Here we go!" they yelled. We blasted off into some where I've never seen.

There were so many things I wanted to ask. How could any of this be possible? Where were we going? Although, perhaps the correct question was: when were we going? Could I go to explore the inside of the TARDIS?

However, the only question that remained in my head as I saw the two of them jumping around the console was: Since I was the only one who knew the phrase "The two Doctors are calling" then, where was future me and why did she sent me the doctors?

"Excuse me", I started without them hearing me, "Where are you taking me?"

"Silence child" said one of them. Who exactly was a mystery because they both were facing away from me. "We were asked to take you somewhere because you are needed".

"Who needs me?"

"Exactly!" Shouted the sixth Doctor as he turned to me "Who... needs you"

The TARDIS made a sound and the doors opened. The two Doctors ran to the entrance and got out. I followed them shortly after and got out of the blue box.

I was in what appeared to be the earth, a few years in the future. Enormous skyscrapers stood high above the clouds, shining and glowing. Farther away, I could see green great mountains with big antennas on them.

I was still looking around when the two Doctors walked forward and only this time, a third figure was walking with them. I looked towards them and they looked towards me.

"Hello, Katelyn" the figure said. "It's great to see you again!"

Chapter 7 by Carolyn Cheng

I stared at the stranger-there was a look in his eyes that looked like something from a man who was lost at sea then had returned home. "Something like that," he said out loud.

I stopped, puzzled. "Wait, you can read my mind?" He only mouthed the word, Kate. I frowned-no one ever called me Kate. Except for my dad. Was this stranger my dad? Suddenly the familiarity in his eyes all came back to me.

"This isn't possible," I blubbered. "You died a few years ago! How are you alive?"

"I found a way to make myself alive again," Dad tapped a bottle with some kind of pink liquid inside, like strawberries. "This is the future. This is the new age."

"Dad, that's awesome!" I cried, throwing my hands around him. "Can you show me around this place?" Dad simply smiled, and as I took his hand we journeyed off into the unknown.
